Question # 2

What makes a job recession-proof?

Answer:-

What makes a job so-called recession-proof is society's perpetual need and heavy demand for the service related jobs. Certain fields, such as health care, education, law enforcement, and various computer-related occupations are thereby always in demand. But as to which specific jobs are the most recession-proof, this varies in different eras, as the times change, and each recession differs. Also, the geographic locality may make a difference.

Question # 19

How to make job recession proof with keeping a positive attitude?

Answer:-

Uncertainty that comes with a recession can make your professional life particularly stressful, but it's crucial that you remain upbeat whenever you're at the office. Employers often spare solution-minded staff members when culling their workforce, so gaining a reputation as a morale booster is a great way to recession-proof your job. Besides, if you keep whining about your occupation, your managers might get the impression they'd be doing you a favor by letting you go.

Question # 20

How to make job recession proof with be visible attitude?

Answer:-

It's important that you distinguish yourself from your coworkers if you want to recession-proof your job. You need to ensure that your employer sees you as more than just a number, so try to stand out during meetings by taking an active interest in the issues and making constructive suggestions whenever possible. By the same token, you should never be shy about asking questions or giving praise. Your goal isn't to present yourself as a blowhard, but rather as a valuable team player.

Question # 21

How to initiative to recession-proof your job?

Answer:-

The most efficient way to recession-proof your job is to become the type of employee your company would need after downsizing its workforce. As such, you have to be at your absolute best during these trying times, demonstrating your expertise as well as your autonomy. Keep in mind that working long hours is not nearly as impressive as getting the job done quickly and efficiently. Show your employer that you can multitask and prioritize your duties.
